ISM Non-Manufacturing Perks Back Up in April

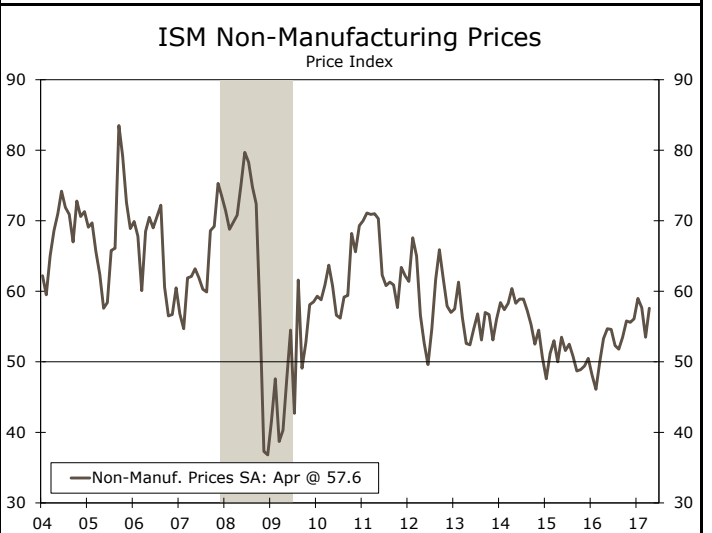

Service sector activity rebounded in April after softening in March. The ISM non-manufacturing index rose 2.3 points to 57.5 in April, mostly recouping momentum lost in March. April's increase bested consensus.

Service Sector Bounces Back From Slip in March

- After slipping 2.4 points in March, the ISM non-manufacturing index bounced back to 57.5 in April. Both production and new orders led the improvement in April, which reinforces our call for economic activity to rebound in Q2.
- The new orders index added 4.3 points to post its current cycle high of 63.2. Demand was boosted by better global economic conditions, as new export orders jumped 3 points to 65.5.

Employment Remained Muted in April

- Employment was the only major component that did not improve in April, slipping another 0.2 points to 51.4—a level that still signals expansion, but at a slower pace. Respondents noted a short supply of labor for the third straight month.
- Price pressures returned in April which should reassure the Fed that March softness was likely transitory and inflation is moving in the right direction.
